I strongly support retaining the taxi rank in St Andrew's Street.

It is vital to be able to get a taxi near the main shopping area for people with limited mobility. Often the reasons for getting a taxi are because taxis save walking and are quicker; if you have to walk further to get the taxi, these advantages disappear.

It is also safer for people getting cabs late at night, better populated and not on the edge of open space.

It would be good for the rank on Drummer St to be better used, as it provides an alternative for some people. From the part of town where I live, Queen Edith's, it enables a more direct route, saving time and money.

If it is possible to have a sensor alerting taxi drivers in Drummer St when there is a space on the St Andrew's rank, would it also be possible for a sensor to show drivers when there are people waiting?

How is the six-only taxis queue rule going to be enforced, given that at present taxi drivers flout it? It must be enforced, as at present it is dangerous for other road users, especially for pedestrians and cyclists.
